

Katherine Howie VN VTS(ECC)

Kath started her nursing career in a busy first opinion practice qualifying in January 2000. After qualification she spent time in first opinion and out of hours emergency care before taking a position as a night nurse in a referral practice. Kath enjoyed referral "hands on" patient care but her passion was for emergency and critical care. In June 2004 she moved to take a position as Senior Veterinary Nurse in the Vets Now Clinic in Farnham. Kath strives to offer the best emergency nursing care that can be provided and in November 2009 passed the American Veterinary Emergency and Critical Care Technician examination after 2yrs of extra study. Kath feels that all nursing care is important but for her, none more so than nursing of the intensive and critical care patient where nurses can really make a difference with knowledge and training
